Do you remember how you used to play as a kid?

Your house or your backyard became whatever your imagination could dream up. A dungeon of ill repute, a baseball stadium filled with fans cheering your name, or a secret headquarters filled with batarangs and your trusty Batmobile. Your imagination knew no bounds. You could shift from a heroic Power Ranger to a devious pirate with a simple tip of the hat. Sooner or later however, that dungeon you journeyed into simply became your path to do laundry. That baseball stadium in your mind shrank and looked more like your fenced in backyard. And that trusty Batmobile? Nothing more than your rusty bike. Your perception of the world evolved.

It changed. You grew up.

Tonight we ask that you forget how old you are. We ask that you imagine you flew towards that second star to the right and went straight on till morning. We ask that you imagine the stage you see before you is not a stage, but Neverland. And those people on "stage" are not actors, but Lost People. They have a story to tell.

A story about lost boys, pirates, Starstuff, magic, and never growing up.

Welcome to Neverland.
